Have you ever veered off the highway far enough to find a town whose buildings reveal the passage of time and seem to stand, now, only as reminders of a thriving past? A quiet envelops the echoes of “boom” times in the voices of the older residents and an almost desolate landscape that belies the activity seen in their eyes as they recall their own memories of this place. Here is a place and a people culminating in a valuable resource for understanding our own history and the story of the places where we dwell.
